Cheryl Moskowitz (Granta, £9.99)

An emotional debut novel about growing up, confused identity and loneliness.

Before conditioning sets in, the childhood innocence and adolescent probing of Francine, Moskowitz's tender heroine, allows her to see through the repression and outward appearance of liberation in the late Sixties and early Seventies, as she struggles with the search for her "missing side" she believes to be represented by Leon, her wayward father. As she hunts from San Francisco to Battersea for the elusive Leon, his reappearance into her life, burdened with his fashionable free-love ideology, adds to her already overwhelming pain. A powerfully written foray into love, life and death.
